Completing the Odyssey: A New Touchstones Program for Veterans

Touchstones is proud to be receiving a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) to develop and run a discussion program with 45 veterans in three groups this coming fall. The award comes through the NEH Education Division funding opportunity “Dialogues on the Experience of War,” which aims to bring veterans together to connect meaningfully through the humanities and in relation to their service.

Our program, “A Journey Home: Completing the Odyssey,” includes eight sessions run by discussion leaders trained by Touchstones plus an additional session at the Library of Congress. Each group will explore selections from Homer’s The Odyssey that are juxtaposed with contemporary works touching on parallel themes of leadership, courage, loyalty, and the challenges soldiers face when returning to civilian life. As part of their program engagement, all participants will be invited to create a permanent project reflecting their own odyssey to be entered into the Veterans History Project, a permanent collection at the Library of Congress.
Indesigning and conducting this unique program, Touchstones is assisted by a distinguished advisory panel. Maryland State Sen. John Astle, Col. USMA (Ret) and Dr. Chris Howard, Col. USAF (Ret), President of Robert Morris University, bring their experience in military and civilian leadership, while Capt. Jeff Macris, USNA; Roger Carstens, Col. US Army (Ret); Erin Woodside, Capt. USAF (Sep); and MSgt. Danielle Harmon, USAF afford the program their perspectives on recent service and the transition to civilian roles. Capt. John Ralph, PhD., USNA who specializes in mental health of military personnel and Michelle Montemayor, PhD., M.D., NYU Medical School contribute their expertise in mental health issues related to service and the return to civilian life. Margareta de Grazia, PhD., Professor Emeritus, University of Pennsylvania, supports the academic elements within the program.

Touchstones Week: Building Community Through Discussion

Touchstones Week is just around the corner (May 1st - 7th), and we are so excited! We have 22 groups registered—from Ontario, Canada in the north to South Carolina in the south, California to the west and New York to the east, and many places in-between. Based on a great response to our own locally hosted discussion in Annapolis on May 2nd, we’re anticipating 30-40 people at that event.

Some Touchstones Week participants are already friends and supporters of Touchstones, but many are just getting introduced to the Touchstones method, thanks in large part due to a great article about Touchstones Week in The Capital Gazette. To read the full article please click here!

Although registration is closed online, if you would like to host a discussion group or attend the Annapolis-area discussion on May 2nd, just let us know by emailing jm@touchstones.org.

We're looking forward to sharing photos, insights, and updates of how collaborative discussion is fostering community and understanding throughout Touchstones Week.

Not Sure How to Host a Group?
Here's a little inspiration...

This group of friends from the Bay Forest Senior Community in Annapolis, MD will be participating in Touchstones Week. If they can do it, so can you! All it takes is a gathering area and a few friendly faces. As Diane Flemming, a Bay Forest member, said:

"I certainly agree with 'It makes one think!' and we've become a close knit group of friends through our Touchstones experience!"

Touchstones Week: A 7-day celebration bringing people together to share ideas and foster understanding and connection!

Using Discussion and Connection to Foster Resident-Led Care

For about 20 years, Touchstones has been running programs with older adults. Our school programs materials were introduced into a residential facility on Long Island in New York in the mid-1990s thanks to a friend, and there was instant recognition of the value that discussion offered that population. Older adults benefit from the social engagement, intellectual stimulation and exposure to new ideas, while feeling a sense of belonging and relevance with people from potentially very different backgrounds. These are three of the four most important factors identified for successful aging.

Over the decades, many thousands of seniors have participated in Touchstones discussions run by our staff and by volunteers—from Maryland to California. But what would it mean to develop a Touchstones program specifically for adults diagnosed with dementia? Thanks to an introduction from our partners at ETC Montessori in Houston, TX, we are exploring that very question with Dr. Cameron Camp from the Center on Applied Research in Dementia. Dr. Camp’s work focuses on shifting to resident-led care wherein people with dementia retain a greater degree of self-efficacy and purpose by purposeful activity and participation in decision-making. Using methods from Montessori education combined with a belief that environment is itself part of treatment, Dr. Camp proposes to revolutionize how people with dementia are understood. His method looks closely and critically at all aspects of care—from the physical surroundings to the forms of treatment and patient engagement. We are excited to investigate how Touchstones’ experience and programming can support this vital and pressing work in elder healthcare.
